Earth Hour

Earth Hour is an annual global campaign (1) encourages people and businesses around the world to switch off electricity at the same time for one hour. Earth Hour (2) in Australia in 2007, (3) 2.2 million people in the city of Sydney turned off all non-essential lights for an hour. Since then it (4) a massive global event. In 2013, millions of people in 7,000 cities and towns around the world switched off their lights for 60 minutes at the end of March. Every year landmarks and well-known buildings (5) the world such as the Sydney Opera House and Harbour Bridge, the Petronas towers in Malaysia, the UK Parliament, Buckingham Palace and the Empire State Building take part and 'go dark' for Earth Hour. The campaign even went into space when astronauts reduced power on the International Space Station in 2011.

Earth Hour is organised (6) the World Wide Fund for Nature (WWF). It was started by Andy Ridley, who is executive director of Earth Hour Global, WWF. He came up with the idea of Earth Hour (7) he wanted to raise awareness of environmental issues by asking people to do something positive (8) the planet. Switching off the lights for an hour (9) make a small difference to the amount of energy we use, but Earth Hour is also a symbolic event to make people think about the problems of climate change.

In 2013 in the UK, the pop group McFly gave a live acoustic performance (using no electricity!) dressed in panda costumes (the WWF's logo is a panda) for Earth Hour. Celebrity chefs Gordon Ramsay and Raymond Blanc created special (10) for families to prepare and eat by candlelight.
